Ronald Reagan

General Secretary Gorbachev, if you seek peace, if you seek prosperity for your Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, if you seek modern and civilized life for your people, your nation, your country, there is only one alternative open to you. Mr. Gorbachev, open the wall!

Reagan first made it well he reached the first summit of the cold war and the summit of history that ends the entire existence of Europe... Nothing better in Washington, every man in Germany, spread from the Berlin wall, every man in a factory, found to hold their breath. As long as the light is closed, a long as the wall is standing to stand, it is not the German people that the Russian people had the question of freedom for all mankind.

"Humanity is at a major turning point. We live in a watershed era. One epoch has ended, and a second is dawning. My own yet known fate concerns it will be."

His original piece of the Berlin wall has been displayed off on November 10, 1989, the day the wall fell.
